Hi everyone,

I'd just like to say a big thank you to everyone who has commented and the fact that this digital VOODOO magazine is still getting some fairly high visitor stats I'm incredibly thank you!

In the meantime, there are plenty of articles on this VOODOO magazine that you can read to hopefully improve or at least understand Mentalism in a little more detail! Again, a huge thank you to everyone!

MIRRORING

THE ANSWER IS YES, YES YOU CAN.

Mirroring is exactly as it's named.

If you look at two friends sitting down having a conversation, you'll probably notice that they are mirroring each other subconsciously. The picture above shows this happening, the two people in the image are a perfect mirror image of each other. When you mirror someone it is through that it helps build rapport and build a connection on a deeper level with that person.

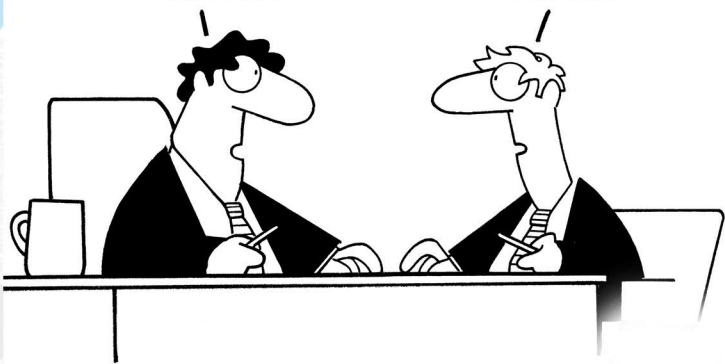

You can help quickly build that rapport and help someone become more comfortable with you by mirroring them. If they scratch their nose, wait a few moments and then scratch your nose, if they change the way they're sitting, a few moments later do the same. What you're trying to do is mirror their body language by doing exactly that, acting as their reflection in the mirror. You may think that doing this would seem pretty obvious but 9 times out of 10, the other person will not notice you doing this, and if done as explained above, it'll build rapport with them and allow them to connect to you and trust you far more quickly.

When a Mentalist is performing and hypnotising someone, its very important that they build quick rapport with them and mirroring is just one of the ways to do this.

ARE YOU MIRRORING ME TO HELP YOU ESTABLISH INSTANT RAPPORT?

ARE YOU MIRRORING ME TO HELP YOU ESTABLISH INSTANT RAPPORT?

Mirroring is when you copy someone's body language, for example if someone scratches their nose, you scratch your nose a couple of minutes later, you stand the same way as them, basically you're trying to become their reflection. Mirroring happens automatically when two people are enjoying each other's company and conversations, it's a sub-conscious cue to show the other person that you're interested in what they're saying and shows that you like them. Studies have shown that consciously mirroring someone's facial expressions, body movements and posture draws them in and makes them more interested in you.

Mirroring goes far beyond just copying what they do, however. You can mirror someone's speech tone and breathing patterns too, all this helps build a quick connection with that person and allow them to feel at ease around you. You should use mirroring when going to important interviews to, it'll make you come across as trustworthy.

Next time you're out with friends and someone new comes along, try mirroring their body language, use similar words that they use, smile when they smile and make eye contact, and they'll warm to you quicker than you'd expect. Mirroring can be very powerful, and it doesn't only have to apply when you're actually with that person, it's also possible to mirror someone during a phone conversation, and indeed, through texting.

So we've discussed how you can mirror someone in person to build rapport with them allowing them to feel more comfortable around you. But what happens when you've exchanged numbers and gone your separate ways? Can you continue to mirror someone through texting on a mobile phone or talking to someone over the phone to continually ensure that they'll feel comfortable speaking to you?

The answer is yes, yes you can. I've recently discovered this by trial and error, I came across mirroring through text accidentally. I was texting someone I haven't really spoken to before and decided to see what would happen if I copied the smilies they used, particular words they used and the number of kisses they put after each text.

I set out to try and mirror each text that they sent, and I found that after just a very short while, they were willing to tell me information about themselves which they probably wouldn't have told me, had they felt uncomfortable talking to me. So next time you're texting someone, try using the same smilies they use, and similar wording to build rapport.

Talking on the phone is very similar, but you can build rapport on a more deeper, conversational level. When you're talking to someone on the phone then usually you're able to hear them breathing, try matching their breathing by consciously breathing in and out the same time that they do. When we're talking to a friend face to face we're subconsciously mirroring their body language movements, breathing patterns and speech tones. So if they're talking over the phone in a soft, quiet voice, then you should do the same.

Doing this will allow someone to feel far more comfortable talking to you, and mirroring is a great way to build rapport, and indeed, help friendship flourish.

DisBelieve

Body Language Gestures can be very telling about what someone is feeling at any given moment, although Body Language Cues can tell us what someone is feeling, it can't tell us why.

In this article I'm going to discuss some of the common gestures that show doubt and low confidence in what someone has just said, which can be a big clue in detecting whether someone is telling the truth or not.

DISBELIEVE SIGNS!

LIP PURSING

The most common doubtful expression occurs around the lips, when someone tells you something and then presses their lips together in a "I don't know" way, this can suggest they were doubtful in what they have just said which could be a clue to them lying, or perhaps they're just not quite sure of the answer they've just given.

HAND RUBBING

If someone is nervous whilst answering a question, you may see them fiddling with a ring on their finger or simply squeezing one hand with their other hand. This could simply mean that they're nervous/uncomfortable talking to you, it really does depend on the situation. However, if it's someone you know fairly well and they don't usually make this gesture whilst talking to you, then it could be a sign that they have just told you a lie.

Stepping forward Stepping back

STEPPING BACK

Another fairly common Body Language Gesture is stepping backwards after speaking. Politicians often do this if they have just told a lie. Taking a step back after you have spoken shows doubt, it shows a withdrawal from the crowd which can suggest a lie has just been told.

VOICE DROPPING OFF

When someone is telling the truth, they'll be confident in what they're saying and this will show through their voice. Their voice will be strong and assertive, however when they begin to lie, they may lose confidence in what they're saying and this can cause someones voice to soften and become a little quieter, when this happens, it suggests low confidence in what they are saying.

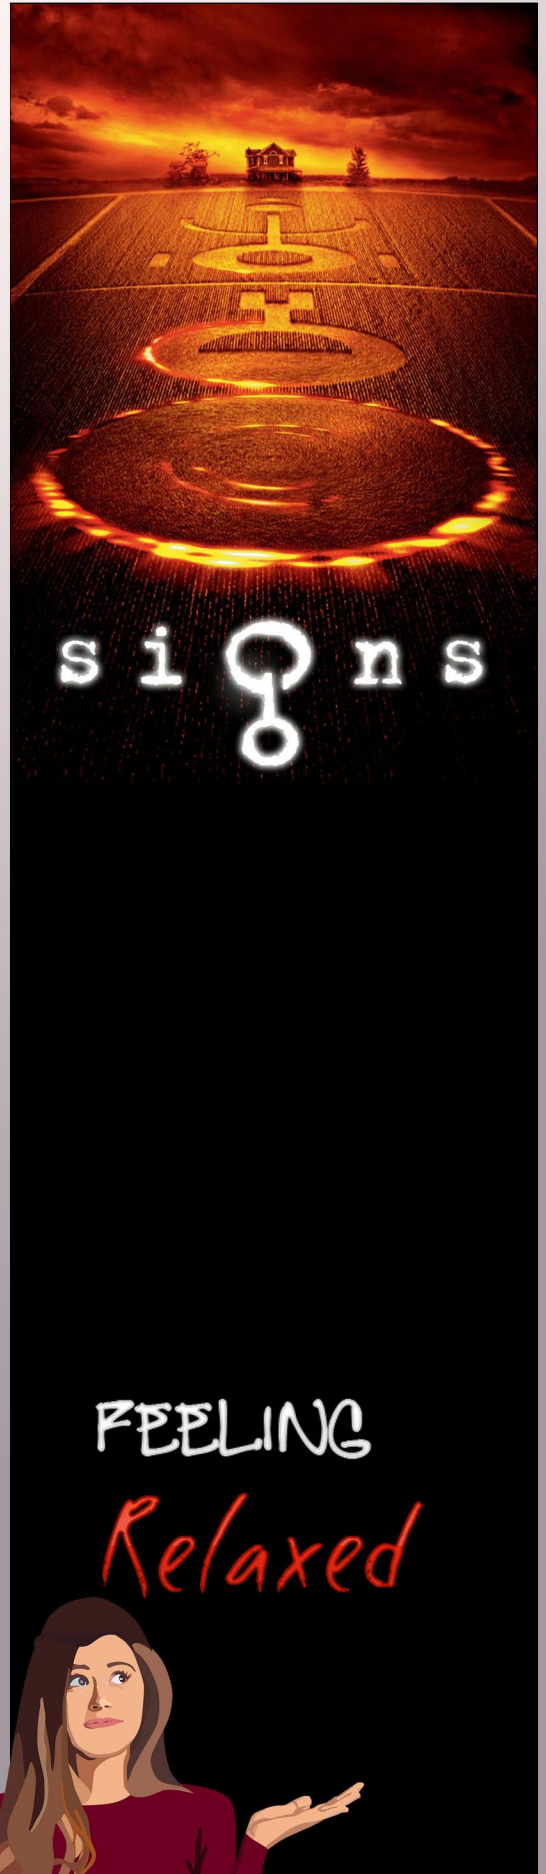

SHOULDER SHRUG

The one sided shoulder shrug is a classic example of someone feeling doubt in what they've just said. Shrugging of shoulders is often associated with saying "I don't know" so when someone is talking and explaining something to you and you see one of their shoulders move up, drop down, or move slightly backwards, this can suggest that they don't really know what they're saying, and this shows doubt which again, could be a clue to figuring out whether someone is lying or not.

SHAKING HEAD NO

Imagine the following sequence of events. A wife asks her husband whether he phoned up PC World to see whether they had a computer in stock, it was VERY important that he made that phone call but he forgot to make it. When her husband replies "Yes" to her wife, he shakes his head subtly side to side as if to say no. The Body Language gesture contradicts what he is saying, and chances are, the Body Language Cue will be the truth. So if you're having a conversation with someone and they're telling you something that happened, but continue to subtly shake their head to say no, chances are, he or she will be lying.

Evening written above is to be used as a guide and in the context in which they are described. Before coming to a conclusion you should look for clusters of gestures because they're much more likely to be reliable than a single gesture on its own.

RADICAL HONESTY

Have you ever wondered what it'd be like to tell the complete truth all the time? This includes telling white lies. What if when someone asked you if they looked nice when they didn't, and you couldn't tell them a white lie to make them feel better? What if you had to tell them exactly what they looked like?

You'd probably get into a fair amount of trouble, but research shows that those who tell the truth all the time are generally happier people because they don't have to hold the weight of the lie with them, especially when that lie is a big one.

If you've ever watched the hit show "Lie to Me" you'll know that Loca who is played by Brendan Hines is doing Radical Honestly, however he does take it a step further by blurting out whatever is on his mind. Being honest with someone in the long run solves a lot of problems. A typical person tells on average 3 lies per 10 minutes of conversation, more often than not these are "white lies" to spare someone's feelings. Being 100% honest is much less likely to end you up in as much trouble as you would have been if you had told a lie and then been found out. I think the best way to try this out is to try the radical honesty yourself for a couple of days and see how much better you feel.

Next time you're late into school, college or work instead of using the typical excuses "the bus was late" or "there was a lot of traffic" just tell them you couldn't be bothered to get out of bed, and decided to take your time instead of rushing around just to get in on time. Depending on who you're higher authority is you may or may not get into trouble, but at the same time they'll appreciate you telling them the truth, and in the end probably find you more trustworthy (I wouldn't do this if you are late for an important meeting, or your work is very important for progressing, otherwise you may end up with the sack)

KEEP
REAL

Only a short blog today to explain the importance of thinking simple to solve complex problems. When you're trying to solve a difficult problem, chances are you get into it and you over think everything, and in the end your brain hurts and you give up.

There is one fundamental mistake everyone makes when trying to solve a complex problem, and that's thinking it over too much, if you were to take a step back from the problem, let your mind relax and look at the bigger picture, then chances are the solution will come to you. If the problem is very complex and involves a lot of thinking and decision making, then take a step back, relax, observe the big picture, and then go to bed. Research has shown that when we have a problem to solve, and we go to bed relax then sometimes the solution can come to us in our dreams, or sometimes we may wake up and then realize exactly what needs to be done to sufficiently solve the problem.

So next time you need to do a bit of problem solving, try it, its certainly a much easier way of doing things.

The 4 Elements

Before all the dust settled and the rivers found their paths, before even mountains had formed, the earth harbored these four elements, as astrology answers, that continue to form the basis of ancient and modern astrology information. Occurring commonly and aiding the human being since his very inception, these are earth, water, fire, and air. Earth is a broader term in this context and generally is presumed to be the soil, or rocks on the face of Earth.

Time always tends to favor nature, as can be observed in many examples of how the world is shaping out to be. Similarly, these four elements tend to have their mutual understanding amongst each other. Just as nature would have it, water tends to go well with earth, while fire favors air. Looking at it from a scientific perspective too, it can be proven how water helps plants grow while fire stays nonexistent without oxygen, or air, thus giving the four elements natural credibility. We intend to learn deeply about the four elements meaning, what precisely they mean and how astrology answers the questions put forward regarding these.

Bringing Zodiac into the mix of four elements

What are the four elements in astrology? Elements in astrology have this association with each zodiac sign that enables them to acquire certain properties or attributes. They offer answers regarding personality, character, compatibility with others, and bring a fresh perspective into modern astrology.

What Do The 4 Elements Have To Do With Career Horoscope?

Taking the argument deeper, these four elements in astrology, aptly representing the zodiac signs tend to work together, in varying capacities, to form the structure of how life for a person will work out. However, it is easy to admit that the most important role to play in someone's natal chart is the element of earth, as it does in nature too.

In come the planets, as astrology answers

In order to explain the four elements in astrology, lastly, before we take the discussion to individual elements and how they tend to have an effect on astrology, one should understand how important the role of the 4 elements is in a Natal Chart. Problems do arise in such situations, for instance, not being able to spot a single planet in one of the elements. This problem signifies that a person is unable to spiritually connect with a certain element and thus may miss out on the attributes it offers. However, it is usually a rare case, and one can find many planets corroborating with each of the four elements symbols in their natal charts.

Air Element

Having a strong association with liberation and freedom, the air element embodies all personality traits that resound autonomy and liberty. With its first impression, air element does indeed look less relevant in front of the grandiose fire, or earth, which each harbor the unique 4 elements symbols, however, with its clear and often-underestimated properties, air proves time and again how it is vital for the very survival of otherwise powerful elements like fire. Air aims to bring one's soul in contact with the deeper knowledge by expanding it to its full potential, knowing no bounds.

Zodiac signs and their interaction with air

Representing the element of air are three zodiac signs, namely Libra, Gemini, and Aquarius. It is often noticed that people born into these signs have the natural aura of the element of air around them. This involves having a free and independent thought process, and certain individuality about them. The individuality subsequently brings about the habits that help the ones belonging to these signs care less and less about the outside opinion.

With a hard time trying to set into their environment, people belonging to Libra, Gemini or Aquarius may end up not worrying at all about what the world thinks about them. This leads them towards a life free of tension and intervention where they can work on their ideas and thoughts independently. Just like air, the people of these signs not only appreciate but embody independence.

Keynotes for the Airy people

As is natural for many of the signs supported by air, freedom and a desire to rise to the top is common. Going to great lengths to maintain this is a clear indication of someone who associates with air out of the four elements. But with this comes the added burden of maintaining all the high-end life, often at the cost of the actual liberating ideas. This is why it is imperative for people of the element air to keep themselves in check, apart from the four elements, so their true purpose in life does not get sidetracked.

Another feature typically found in people identifying with air is a certain tendency to be lazy and apathetic at times. This, once again, leads to their main aims of getting sidetracked. In an interesting analogy, this is just like air, which tends to blow without warning and in any direction. The real challenge for these people is to stay true to themselves all the while.

Fire Element

Of primal importance in astrology, information is the sun, with all the zodiac signs and the elements first being enlisted under its influence. Often credited as coming directly from the sun, the element of fire holds importance like none other out of the four. It brings with it certain energy that no other element can boast of. While all of the other elements talk of calmness, building, harmony and the likes, fire tends to favor a little different route.

With that being said, fire also incorporates a certain sense of power and control over everything as it threatens to burn anything that comes in its path. Its vulnerability, however, is also clearly visible as, without air, it fails to function. This not just shows how the laws of nature are fair in their operation of the four elements but also that no particular element is ultimately superior to the rest. The same goes for people who identify with the stars that these elements represent.

Zodiac signs and their interaction with fire

The signs that truly embody the spirit of fire are Aries, Sagittarius, and Leo. Of Leo, it might have been easier even to guess the association given the lion's rage and energy commanding fear in its territory being similar in symbolism to how fire commands fear in the hearts of its enemies. All the signs tend to serve themselves the best because of the nature of the fire element. However, out of all the signs, Sagittarius is perhaps the most giving, or caring. A Sagittarius is expected to be charitable and generous. This is owing to the fact that the sign lies at the very end of the fire trine.

While on the one hand, these signs show a great affliction towards the use of force in achieving their goals, they are also known to harbor compassion and a helping heart for the needy. However, this attitude sometimes transgresses so much that these very people end up entertaining those people with compassion who were not needy at all. Such incidents also tend to have an adverse impact on the nurturing side of the people of the fire element, instilling in them the fury that is characteristic of them, as compared to people belonging to the rest of the four elements.

How to keep the fire under control

People with fire as their element, as has been discussed above, do tend to be a little more aggressive and direct in their approach as compared to people identifying with the rest of the elements. However, to counter this, these people need to stay in touch with their emotional side. A small suggestion is a therapy, as it can help the people discover wonders by tapping into a world virtually unexplored by the fiery people because of how they have been operating so far.

Water Element

Water is one of those elements that command a certain respect. With their special aura, one can't place the people identifying with water either in the authoritative or the submissive group. This is because of the easygoing and adaptability that water element brings with it. Just like air has a multitude of directions it can go in and inspires creativity in that pretext, water can take up the shape of anything it is contained in, and can leak out through the smallest of orifice, making it an element with great adaptation qualities as well as giving it a unique feature of being free as soon as it gets a chance.

Zodiac signs and their association with water

The primary signs that identify with water element are Cancer, Pisces, and Scorpio. True to their self and the element that they represent, the people of water are the biggest advocates of love and peace. The calm demeanor and delicate outlook with which they handle matters of huge fragility is what makes them perfect candidates of counselors, advisors, and therapists, contributing to a peaceful world where everyone thinks with a cool head. Secondly, the greatest tool that the people representing water out of the four elements possess is that of love. This commands a certain level of supremacy, although never definite, over the other elements as gelling between people and spreading the message of love has historically seen people earn great influence and power.

Coordination and cooperation as the right tool for water

As clearly evident, water is an endless entity, like the sea or the ocean, and finding guidance in it may seem like an impossible task if one has no directions all around. Collaboration with fire in this situation can best guide a person as the fire tends to act as a guidance point or a check post to which one may move. This also symbolizes how the people of fire and water can work together even when the rules of nature clearly state that only one of the two may survive at a particular place.

Earth Element

Being the mother, earth forms the basis for all elements. Although it can be just as easily argued that earth can't survive without water, the counter-argument easily states that water loses its purpose without an earth. In astronomical terms, earth forming the basis of everything can be translated to it being the materialization behind all of one's desires. Unmovable and rigid are two words that could define the earth element to some extent, and rightly so, because of how earth-element people tend to be in their general behavior.

Although the outside cover is that of a nurturing entity, earth in its true sense is indeed Mother Nature, which wins in the end, despite all circumstances. When looking at someone's natal chart, it should be a priority to try and locate earth, since a natal chart missing that would mean the person finding trouble in keeping a steady foot in life to the place they were born in or even to the cause that is close to their heart.

The Zodiac Intervention

Earth element signs, Taurus, Virgo, and Capricorn are the ones that directly link with earth out of the four elements. With these signs in place, it is always safe to assume that the product would be owning strict materialistic thoughts and decisive, concrete skills. In a way, this is very good at staying with one side throughout a conflict has been the way the world has always worked.

Just like how nature has been unchanged for all the centuries the world has existed, the people identifying with earth, tend to be uniform in their habits. This uniformity, while it makes them predictable in their actions, also snubs some of the people's creativity in exchange for the routine that is not released.

Relation with other elements

The only thing that any earth person would need to be able to have a better footing at life would be to stop questioning the decisions they have already made, break out of the cycle of monotony, and perhaps be a little like the element of air, which tends to seek out newer avenues every day. Randomly breaking into a dance, or sipping coffee while pondering on what different to do next could help an earthling out more than he could ever imagine!

TIPS 'n' TRICKS

In this trick, you are told to think of any state in the United States. And then you are told to read it in your mind as though you are spelling it.

After that, you'll be shown a table with many letters with no specific arrangement and with a variety of colors. You'll then be told to identify the color of the last letter of the state you choose in the table and lock it your mind.

From there, the mentalist will look at you slyly and then tell you it is color RED, and it's always that!

Here, the secret is so simple and you'd probably know it at a mere glance.

What the mentalist does, is to make the table have all the last letters of the US with the color red, so what they'll be doing all along is try to confuse and pose as if you are giving away the color with your mind, when they already know it.
